

Abstract

To provide users with a reliable remaining recordable time of a recording medium, a calculation for the remaining recordable time is performed by dividing a free area size of the recording medium by a standard bit rate used for compressing
5 video streams. The free area size is obtained by subtracting an amount of already recorded stream data in the recording medium and an estimate error value from a capacity of the recording medium.